Bridge occupied the chair, and, not only were the usual loyal toasts and sentiments were given, and a variety of appropriate speeches and songs contributed much to the enjoyment of the meeting. We are glad to hear that this lodge is in a very prosperous condition, there having been 28 members added to it since the last anniversary.

CURIOUS AND SINGULAR.—On the 23rd inst. Mr. Collins, the excise officer, arrived at Northallerton, and on examination that two men, named John and Joseph Cowling, who live at Low Gate, had been defrauding the revenue to a considerable extent, had been traced from Leeming Lane to Northallerton, and were supposed to be in the neighbourhood. On Wednesday morning suspicion fell on two persons, who lately resided in Northallerton, but removed upon a mill, malting, and premises, intending to carry on business as maltsters and flour dealers, and Co., as agricultural implement dealers, &c. They had obtained goods from several tradesmen in the town, and, it would appear, without intending to pay them. Two of the borough police were sent to the mill in disguise as sacking carriers, and, on applying for a sack of malt, were refused, and told they could not get it, unless they paid for it. They then offered to pay the money amount, to be raised by a sale of their goods, which was refused, and they were told they could take their chattels. They set to it in earnest, out of an unrivalled body, with the greatest dispatch, and in the presence of the police, and shortly after the apprehension of the two Cowlings, Benjamin Cowling, Esq., brother to Joseph and John, arrived from Leeds, and paid the money under false pretences.—Ed.

HARVEST PROSPECTS IN THE WEST RIDING.—A letter, written from the West Riding of Yorkshire, says:—The rain which has fallen during the last week has been of incalculable benefit to the district, by the improvement which it has effected in the crops of spring—corn, turnips, potatoes and the meadows and pastures. Owing to the fine sunny weather which we had during the last month, vegetation is advanced than it has been known to be at this season since the year 1826. The grain crops are looking well, and though the potatoes, as the sets have had moderate rains to the ground, and have been carefully and are considered honourable to all, still what has been planted is in a very fine state, and will be ready for use before the middle of next month. I hear and see around, there are but a little prospect of an abundant harvest.

JUSTICE ROOM, HEMSWORTH.

THURSDAY, JUNE 8.

(Before W. J. Bagshawe, Esq.)

Thomas Nightingale and William Horne, both of Eckington, were charged by Richard Tipson, constable, with committing a breach of the peace.

Mr. Richard Heald, constable, said that on the 23rd of May, between eleven and twelve o'clock at night, he was called out to preserve the peace, as he found a fight was likely to take place. He was in the street near the Duke of York public house; he said Nightingale was very frequently causing disturbances in the neighbourhood, and in June last was fined for fighting; he then promised the magistrates that he would abstain from such conduct in the future, but instead of keeping his promise his conduct had been quite the reverse.

Horner said it was true they were fighting, but it was compelled by Nightingale, and called upon him to desist; he declined fighting when Nightingale challenged him, until he was compelled either to fight or run away.

Nightingale, in his defence, said that about a fortnight before the 23rd of May he was at the Duke of York public house, when he saw Horner at his brother took his cap, and he had not been able to get it back. He went down on the night in question to try to get it back, and found Horner at the same public-house; they then agreed to fight.

The case against Horner was dismissed, and Nightingale was called upon to enter in his own recognizances in the sum of £10, and find two sureties in the same amount, and pay 13s. 6d. costs.

John Pailey, of Elmton, charged James Haslam, game keeper to W. H. De Rodes, Esq., with assaulting him at the parish of Elmton.

Defendant was fined in the penalty 10s. 6d. costs.

Francis Presley, of Killamarsh, tailor, charged John Hurst with being a disorderly apprentice.

Complainant said that Hurst absented himself on the 7th day of last January, and he had not been able to come up with him since; on Wednesday, when the Killamarsh constable apprehended him at Retford.

Defendant said that he was bound apprentice to Presley, about two years ago, and that he had never received a premium of £1 11s, but only 6s of the premium had been paid.

Complainant said that was the premium and costs, he would give him his indenture.

Ordered to pay the premium and 26s costs by four monthly instalments, and, in default, to be committed to the house of correction for three months.

Samuel Milner, of Killamarsh, was brought up in custody, charged with stealing £1, the property of Mr. Smith, of Eckington.

Prosecutor did not appear, and on

Milner promising to attend before the Mr. Smith, of Eckington, on the 22nd inst., he was discharged.

THE TORTUOUS PATHS OF LOVE.—In a recent issue of Derbyshire Courier we noticed a farmer, who farms his own land; he is a bachelor, and has for some years past desired to have a wife to share in his joys and sorrows. But such a wife as he desires is not to be found at every turn: for she must be possessed of a high, healthy, and wealthy. Now, it happened in the course of last summer, that his attention was drawn to the fifth heiress, the daughter of a jolly farmer of the old school, "who lives on the hill"), a lovely maiden of eighteen. At the time the said bachelor, the said heiress, and the said farmer, on the hill, a six feet six farm servant of a good middle age, industrious, and very earnest in his endeavours in the course of his servitude, saved about two hundred pounds. The gallant farmer was also desirous of bestowing their comfort and; he was employed on Sundays, and at other times, when opportunity served, to carry messages from one to the other, a distance of four miles, and for a time he fulfilled his engagement in a most trustworthy manner. The lady would do better for herself than for his employer; this he has told since, but he was then quite unable to see the thought, but he did at once, so he had recourse to a little strategy; he continued to carry their messages as usual, but on every occasion he altered the words to suit each, which he charged them, on pain of the loss of their employment, to keep to themselves, by both in every instance, was agreed to. To the gallant beau, he represented the belle as despising the quality of bashful, and very earnest, and also of being secretly attached to another, with whom, on several occasions, he had seen her walking; and if he was in the Place he would not prosecute the matter any further. To the fair one, he represented the gallant beau as quite the reverse, prodigal, drunken, quarrelsome, and much given to courtesans; and the consequence was he was dismissed, and the beau he turned his mind entirely against the buxom lamer, so that she would never after have one to share in her joys or sorrows. This was the time when he offered himself as her suitor. The fact at first caused some degree of vexation; to which she replied, that there was a great difference in their age, education, and circumstances, and that she considered him, and in the end she consented to receive his addresses. All this was done, and carried on for some other months, without the old farmer (her father) knowing anything at all about it; but at length they were betrayed by one who had had entrusted with their secrets. When her father knew what was going on in his house, he was very much, and more angry on his account, to prevent, as he said, "further mischief." But love will find out a way, and the intimacy was abundantly continued. Finally, she consented to give the hero of our tale her hand; and the nuptials were highly solemnized for the time. The day was fixed, their plans (as they thought) well laid, and the day arrived: they were to meet in the parish church, early in the morning. He got to the church, and sat off to the appointed rendezvous. But the swain on the hill
